Andrzej L. Zachariasz

ISTNIENIE
Jego momenty i absolut czyli
w poszukiwaniu przedmiotu einanologii

WYDAWNICTWO
UNIWERSYTETU RZESZOWSKIEGO
RZESZÓW 2004
Contents

From the Author ........................................................................................................................................ 11

Introduction ........................................................................................................................................... 14

Part One
THE THEORY OF BEING AS THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE FIRST PRINCIPLES

Introduction ........................................................................................................................................... 21

SECTION ONE
The theory of being and its place in the structure of philosophical reasoning ......................... 23
1. Preliminary remarks .......................................................................................................................... 23
2. The philosophy of the first principles ............................................................................................ 25
3. Metaphysics as the answer to the question about the principles of being „beyond this world” and its irrationalization ........................................................................................................... 27
4. Ontology as the theory of being ....................................................................................................... 32
5. First philosophy, metaphysics and ontology vs. einanology and their mutual relationships ....... 36
6. Existence and its moments and ontology vs. einanology and their mutual relationships ............ 36
7. The place of the theory of being and its moments in the structure of philosophical reasoning (final remarks) ....................................................................................................................... 42

SECTION TWO
The methods of practicing ontology in modern philosophy .......................................................... 46
1. Preliminary remarks .......................................................................................................................... 46
2. Ontology: state of the art, or how was the theory of being pursued in recent times? ............... 47
2.1. The theory of being as the generalization of particular disciplines and as a particular discipline itself ........................................................................................................................................... 48
2.2. The theory of being as the conceptual scheme by which definite existence is interpreted ... 52
2.2.1. Neoscholastic theory of being ............................................................................................... 52
2.2.2. N. Hartmann's categorial ontology ....................................................................................... 55
2.2.3. R. Ingarden's phenomenological ontology .......................................................................... 57
2.2.4. Ontology as the theory of actual being ................................................................................ 61
2.3. The metaphysics of „endurance” as the „intuition of the inconstancy of being” .............. 63
2.4. Being as „becoming” and as „existing” ............................................................................. 65
2.4. 1. Being as „becoming”. G. W. F. Hegel's metaphysics ...................................................... 66
2.4. 2. The reconstruction of being in its existence”. M. Heidegger's existential ontology ........ 69
2.5. „General Ontology as the Study of Existence” by S. I. Witkiewicz (Witkacy) ............ 71
2.6. Other approaches to the theory of being ............................................................................... 74
3. The multiplicity of anthologies as an indication of the relativity of the theoretical account of being (final remarks) ............................................................................................................. 76

SECTION THREE
Is the theory of existence and its moments possible and, if so, in what way is it attainable? 78
1. Preliminary remarks ................................................................................................................ 78
2. The question concerning the possibility of reflection upon being .......................................... 78
3. The argument about the impossibility of the study of ontology and its sources ................... 79
4. Is cognition possible? Theoretical knowledge and the issue of its object status .................. 82
5. The theory of being as a function of the knowledge about reality as the object of human actions ........................................................................................................................................ 84
6. The theory of existence and its moments as a transcendental and relativistic formula of theoretical thinking (final remarks) ......................................................................................... 94

Part two
EXISTENCE AND ITS MOMENTS

Introduction ............................................................................................................................... 101

SECTION FOUR
In the search of the first principle, or striving to being as something definite. From endurance to becoming ............................................................................................................. 102
1. Preliminary remarks ............................................................................................................. 102
2. On the road to being (τὸ ὄν) ............................................................................................. 102
3. Being as the principle of endurance .................................................................................... 104
4. The idea of the dual world. The world of appearance and the world of real existence ........ 111
5. Reality as change and becoming and questions concerning the first principle of what there is 117
6. Being (τὸ ὄν) as horizon and the limiting concept of ontological thinking (final remarks) .... 121

SECTION FIVE
Existence and the heterogeneity of the moments of its self-manifestation ............................... 123
1. Preliminary remarks .......................................................................................................... 123
2. Kant’s destruction of the concept of being and the question about being and its concept .... 125
3. What there “is”, or from being to “existing” ...................................................................... 128
4. Being and the problem of existence ................................................................................... 132
5. Existence and the issue of its definiteness ............................................................................ 137
6. Being as the limiting concept of ontological reflection ......................................................... 138
7. What does it mean, that existence can be defined conceptually (final remarks) ................. 140

SECTION SIX
Existence and the question about its definiteness, or about being as „something” ............. 143
1. Preliminary remarks .................................................................................................................. 143
2. Existence and its moments. Argument about being and its conceptualization ...................... 144
3. What does it mean to be being as “something”? Difference as the constitutive moment of existence in its definiteness ................................................................. 148
4. Being as a system. The transcendent and immanent status of the constitutive principles of the conceptualization of existence as being ......................................................... 151
   4. 1. Existence as „something” and the transcendent principle constituting the heterogeneity of the moments of existence as being .................................................. 152
   4. 2 The heterogeneity of the moments of existence as the condition of the principle constituting being as „something” ........................................................................... 155
5. Compound being and the issue of the so-called simple being (final remarks) ................. 157

SECTION SEVEN
Existence vs. being and non-being, nothingness and indefiniteness .................................... 159
1. Preliminary remarks .................................................................................................................. 159
2. “Not” as negation and definition and existence and its moments ............................................. 160
3. Non-being as that which “is not something” ........................................................................ 163
4. Nothingness or “nothing-which is-thingness” vs. pure existence ........................................... 169
5. The negation of existence or nonexistence ............................................................................. 173
6. Non-being and nothingness and indefiniteness as the condition of heterogeneity and becoming (final remarks) .......................................................................................... 176

SECTION EIGHT
Heterogeneity of moments and cosmos and the chaos of existence ...................................... 180
1. Preliminary remarks .................................................................................................................. 180
2. Cosmos as the formula of the conceptualization of the heterogeneity of the moments of existence .................................................................................................................. 181
3. The structure of existence in the face of the relativization of the logos of thinking .............. 183
4. The sequence of endurance in comparison with the heterogeneity of the moments of existence. Being and the problem of “becoming” .......................................................... 186
5. Chaos and the problem of heterogeneity (becoming) of the moments of existence .......... 190
6. The chaos of existence and the logos of thinking. Ontology as the transcendent conceptualization of the infinite heterogeneity of the moments of existence (final remarks) ..... 195

SECTION NINE
The moments of self-manifestation of existence and their conceptualization in the structure of transcendent concepts ................................................................. 197
1. Preliminary remarks .................................................................................................................. 197
2. The cognizance of cognizant being as the cognizance of existence or of the being that is being cognized .................................................................................................................... 198
3. The heterogeneity of the moments of existence or being as something with regard to the cognizing being ...................................................................................................................... 199
4. The conceptualization of the definiteness of existence in view of the possibility of acknowledging in being .................................................................................................................. 201
4. 1. Empirical being .............................................................................................................. 203
4. 2. Intentional objects and the issue of the so-called metaphysical being ...................... 204
4. 3. Intentional objects and the issue of the so-called possible and impossible being .... 205
5. The conceptualization of the moments of existence in view of the relations that arise between them ...................................................................................................................... 207
5. 1. The heterogeneity of the moments of existence as the condition of the qualitative treatment of being ........................................................................................................... 208
5.2. Qualitative treatment of the moments of existence ......................................................... 210
5.3. The treatment of the moments of existence in view of the relations of inherence, cause-effect, expediency and unity ................................................................................. 211
5. 4. The treatment of the moments of existence in view of modality ................................... 214
6. Being vs. necessity and obligation. Value as a moment of existence. Values and virtue ...... 216
7. Forms of existence as an attempt of the unification of the heterogeneity of the moments of existence (final remarks) ....................................................................................................... 219

Part Three

EMPIRICAL BEING AND THE MODES OF ITS EXISTENCE

Introduction ............................................................................................................................... 223

SECTION TEN

Existence and empirical being. Material being and immaterial being as an object of the realization of the activity of the human self ................................................................................ 225
1. Preliminary remarks ........................................................................................................ 225
2. Experience and the issue of being .................................................................................... 227
3. Action and sensual perception and comprehension or the issue of empirical being .......... 233
4. The consciousness of corporal resistivity and the question of matter .............................. 236
5. Comprehension and sense as in real being. The status of value ......................................... 239
6. Empirical being as an object of the realization of the activity of the human self (final remarks) ...................................................................................................................... 243

SECTION ELEVEN

Space-time as the form of existence of material being ......................................................... 245
1. Preliminary remarks ........................................................................................................ 245
2. Time and space as categories of common experience and attempts of their theoretical interpretation .......................................................................................................................... 245
3. Time and space as autonomous and heteronomic categories with regard to material being. Space as non-being; time as efflux of endurance .......................................................... 246
4. Space and time as transcendental and a priori forms of sensuousness ........................................ 248
5. Time and space as forms of existence of material being ..................................................................... 250
6. Mathematical space and its influence on the perception of physical space ........................................... 251
7. Space-time as an existential moment of matter (material being) and the condition of the existence of the human self (final remarks) ......................................................................................... 252

SECTION TWELVE

Space as the form of existence of inmaterial being .......................................................... 257
1. Preliminary remarks .......................................................................................................................... 257
2. Space as the moment of existence and the accomplishment of sense and the category of cultural reality ................................................................................................................................. 258
3. Culture and the problem of its continuity. Meanings and their dimensionality ............................... 259
4. Space as sense and its function in the determination of culture as the system of senses ............ 266
5. Space as a mythological category and space as the area of human activity ............................... 270
6. Space and the problem of hermetic or open cultures ...................................................................... 272
7. The meaning of space as the moment of cultural being (final remarks) ....................................... 274

SECTION THIRTEEN

Time as the moment of the existence of culture and as a cultural category .............................. 275
1. Preliminary remarks .......................................................................................................................... 275
2. Time and the problem of heterogeneity ......................................................................................... 276
3. Culture, its heterogeneity and time ................................................................................................. 279
4. Time as sense and the problem of mythological and historical time ............................................ 280
5. Historical time and the problem of the status of that category, or: the past, the present and the future ........................................................................................................................................... 286
6. Time and the problem of historicity ............................................................................................... 291
7. Cultural space-time and the problem of the forms of its heterogeneity (final remarks) ........... 293

Part Four

METAPHYSICAL BEING AND ITS CONCEPTUALIZATION

Introduction ................................................................................................................................. 299

SECTION FOURTEEN

Metaphysical being and the possibility of its theoretical conceptualization. The issue of the sufficient condition of the existence of empirical being .......................... 301
1. Preliminary remarks .......................................................................................................................... 301
2. Empirical being and its fortuitousness. The question concerning the condition of the existence of empirical being ............................................................................................................. 301
3. Metaphysical being and the problem of substantiation. Why does there exist “something”, even though nothing could have existed equally well there? ......................................................... 305
4. Metaphysical being, the modes of its existence and various ways of their substantiation .... 307
5. Man as being with regard to other being and the issue of the justifiability of the existence of empirical being amidst metaphysical being .......................................................... 311

381
6. The attempts of justification for the existence of metaphysical being and the question of their justifiability (final remarks) ................................................................. 313

SECTION FIFTEEN

The issue of the absolute and the limits of its justifiability. Existence and the absolute .... 316
1. Preliminary remarks ........................................................................................................ 316
2. The possibility of the conceptualization of that which is absolute. The limits of justifiability of the question about absoluteness ................................................................................. 317
3. The absolute as endurance or the accomplished perfection ........................................ 319
4. The paradox of the absolute conceived as finite perfection ........................................ 322
5. The absolute as perfection in the face of infinity and unlimitedness .............................. 327
6. The absolute in the face of the concept of becoming and infinity ................................... 328
7. The infiniteness of becoming as the infiniteness of the heterogeneity of the moments of self-manifestation of existence, or the infinity beyond absolute being .................................... 332
8. The absoluteness of existence as infinite relativization of definiteness (final remarks) ...... 334

SECTION SIXTEEN

The God of religion and the absolute of philosophy .......................................................... 336
1. Preliminary remarks ........................................................................................................ 336
2. Two ways of thinking: religious thinking and philosophical thinking.......................... 337
3. The God of religion as the justification of the human self in the practical mode of Man's being in existence .............................................................................................................. 341
4. The Christian God or the encounter of religion and philosophy and the gods of mythosphy .......................................................................................................................... 346
5. The theologists’ God as the God of religion in the boundaries of theoretical reason (final remarks) ............................................................................................................................ 348

SECTION SEVENTEEN

Man as metaphysical being ............................................................................................... 350
1. Preliminary remarks ........................................................................................................ 350
2. The justification of the human self in practical consciousness. Man as religious being ...... 351
3. Soul as a metaphysical justification of the human self ...................................................... 355
4. Theoretical prerequisites of the justifiability of the distinction between the spiritual substance and the material substance ............................................................................................... 359
5. Consciousness as the moment of the human self and the concept of soul ....................... 364
6. The awareness of being and the problem of the metaphysical character of the human self (final remarks) .................................................................................................................. 366

CONCLUSION ..................................................................................................................... 370

The being of being and the question about sense, or Man in the face of infinite heterogeneity of existence ............................................................................................................... 370

Index of names .................................................................................................................. 373

382